NO. 1, OF THE CELEBRATED

ATLAS OF MR. PINKERTON,

NOW PUBLISHING IN LONDON.

Has been Published by EDWARD J. COALE,
No. 176, Market-street, Baltimore.

No. 2, containing an elegant Map of Germany, the Seat of War in Europe, &c. will be published in a few weeks.

PROSPECTUS.

THIS Atlas has received in Great Britain a patronage more extended than has ever been bestowed on a work of the like nature, and the American publishers trust that the name of Mr. Pinkerton (now well known in this country by his excellent Geography) and the magnificent style in which they intend the work shall be executed will render their edition worthy the attention of the American public.

In his prospectus, prefixed to the English edition, Mr. Pinkerton thus clearly details his plan "It is proposed that this Atlas shall consist of at least an equal number of Maps with those of the new edition of Mr. PINKERTON'S GEOGRAPHY, but of the size called Colombier, so as to correspond with the celebrated works of D'ANVILLE. These Maps will be delineated with all the superior advantages afforded by the latest improvements in geographical precision; and engraved with elegance and care; so as to exceed, it is to be hoped, any work of a similar nature, published in any country. So many improvements have been made in Geography, within these ten or twelve years, in the trigonometrical surveys of many European countries, and from more accurate descriptions of distant realms, that the publication of a new general Atlas seems indispensable, especially as late works of this kind are often founded on ancient material, and drawn from inaccurate surveys made half a century ago. Each Map will be drawn under Mr. Pinkerton's direction, revised with the utmost care; and will form, like the works of D'ANVILLE, a complete record of the state of the science at the time of publication. Table land, chains of mountains, and other features which belong to the natural geography of each country, will be indicated in a new manner, and with an exactness not to be expected from geographers who are unacquainted with that branch of the science; which is, however, so essential, that, without it, no country can be truly represented, nor works on natural and civil history perfectly understood. In the other parts, which illustrate civil history, equal care shall be exerted not to insert obscure hovels and villages, while places remarkable in historic record are total omitted. Instead of careless positions, arising from the blind imitation of antiquated Maps, the greatest attention will be bestowed, that every position shall be conformable to the latest astronomical observations; and in behalf of these, to the result of the best itineraries, and other authentic documents."

The superiority in the manner of drawing and engraving this Atlas must necessarily occasion uncommon expense; but, amid the frequent publication of the most high priced and superb collection of prints, it may reasonably be expected that the science of geography, so useful to all classes of men, should, in this opulent country, aspire to some degree of that magnificence which distinguishes the progress of the arts. And while even those arts which are merely ornamental, meet with the most liberal encouragement, it may be hoped that a work uniting wide and lasting utility with beauty and magnificence will not be neglected by a discerning public.

TERMS:

I. This work will be completed in about twenty numbers, each containing three Maps, and will be executed in a style similar and in every respect equal to the English edition.
II. It will be published on a wire-woven paper of the size called Colombier (23 inches by 35) so as to correspond with the celebrated works of D'Anville.
III. The price of each number will be four dollars plain, and five dollars coloured. The price will be considerably increased to non-subscribers.
IV. Copies of each number will be neatly put together, with the Maps carefully folded upon guards as they will be bound when the work is completed, for more safe conveyance to the country, whilst other copies will be delivered without any fold to those who may prefer them in that state.
V. In the last number it is proposed to give a Geographical Memoir, reciting the character and merits of the chief authorities upon which each Map is constructed, with directions for a general arrangement.
